

SETTING FINANCIAL BOUNDARIES

Supporting

Helping someone through a rough financial patch when they can't do it on their own.

Enabling

Swooping in and doing things for them they're capable of.

I'm all for giving back and sharing what you can. Being generous with others is one of the best things about having money. But never, ever sacrifice your own financial stability for anyone else's sake.

Are you (and your money) being taken for granted? Here are some warning signs that you're being used:

- Borrows money and doesn't pay it back
- Pressures you into lending money
- Takes money from your account or wallet without asking
- Uses your cards without asking
- Makes financial decisions that impact you without asking
- Refuses to contribute to household expenses
- Takes out bills or debt in your name

2 golden rules to remember

Never give money that you can't afford to give

Don't go into debt on behalf of someone else

"Duty does not require any person to submit to the destruction of their personal ambitions and the right to live their life in their own way."

- Napoleon Hill
